SOCIAL and PERSONAL

Miss Elise Fielding Miles, of the University of Virginia, has been spending several days in Roanoke as the guest of her cousin, Miss Mary Stuart Cooke. Miss Miles also visited Hollins College, where her sister, Miss Eleanor Kent, is a student this session. Miss Cooke has recently returned from a stay of several weeks with friends in Little Rock, Ark., and, with Miss Miles, will come to Richmond shortly after Easter week.

Mrs. Gordon Honored.
Mrs. Douglas Gordon and Mrs. Tunstall Smith, of Baltimore, who have been the guests of Dr. and Mrs. William Roane Aylett in Newport News, have been entertained a great deal during their visit there. On Saturday evening, Preston Cotton, of Norfolk, was host at a very handsome dinner given in honor of Mrs. Gordon and Mrs.
Smith at the Chamberlin Hotel, and on Tuesday Mrs. Ferguson held a luncheon for the visitors. Mrs. L. Marshall gave a very pretty little tea complimentary to Mrs. Smith and Mrs.
Gordon at Fort Monroe on Wednesday afternoon, and there were numerous other smaller affairs given for them during the past several days.

Attends Dance.
Says a Baltimore exchange: Allan Hanson Snowden gave an informal dance, followed by tea, Monday afternoon at the residence of his father, Wilton Snowden, 665 Cathedral Street. The rooms were decorated with spring flowers, and Miss Mary Snowden, an aunt of the host, poured tea and chaperoned the guests, who included Miss Sara Bell Williams, Miss Anne S. Randolph, Miss Helen Whitridge, Miss Eleanor Tunstall, Miss

FULL-FLEDGED DUKE BURIED AS A PAUPER

Late Napoleon Louis Macdonald, Scion of Historic House, in Potter's Field.

BY LA MARQUESE DE FONTENAY.
A FULL-FLEDGED duke of ancient lineage in the potter's field—not in this country, where quite a number of great nobles after being ruined in the Old World, seek refuge and oblivion—but in his native land of France.

The duke in question is the late Napoleon Louis Macdonald, third Duke of Tarente, and a scion of the historic house of Macdonald, of which Lord Macdonald of the Isles is the chief. He died last year, alone, abandoned, and in such extreme poverty that the best which could be done for him was a pauper's funeral and a pauper's grave in the metropolitan cemetery of Bagnolet, where he was interred, not in a separate grave, but in the "fosse commune," that is to say, the long trench in which paupers are buried, in common made of rough, unplaned pine boards, without shroud, and without any form of religious rite.

These facts have just been brought to light by the search made by Mrs.
Arthur Hamilton Coates, on her recent arrival from India, to ascertain what had become of her brother's remains. She was the Comtesse Marie-anne Macdonald de Tarente, married in 1850 an Englishman, Arthur Hamilton Coates, and makes her home at Lahore, in British India. She had completely lost sight of her only brother, had, in fact, become more or less estranged from him. On her return recently from India she learned of his death, and being unable to get any information about him from the former friends of her family, she applied to the French authorities, who, after a considerable amount of research, informed her that he had been buried as a pauper, and that having been laid in the "fosse commune" which literally means the common trench or ditch, it was hopeless to make any attempt to recover the body, from the many hundreds that are interred in that particular portion of the cemetery pell-mell each year.

The late duke was the grandson and heir to the honors and estates of that first duke who, as Marshal Macdonald, played so great a role in the Napoleonic wars at the beginning of the nineteenth century. Descended from a branch of the Macdonalds, the only which had espoused the cause of James II, after the latter's retirement to France, his father having been a very near relative of the celebrated Flora Macdonald, he captured Rome for the French in 1798, and took part in most of the Napoleonic victories, being created a Marshal of France and Duke of Tarente by the Emperor, on the battlefield of Wagram, where his division broke the Austrian center and won the victory. He was Napoleon's ambassador in turn to Copenhagen and to Russia, remained faithful to the Emperor after all the other marshals had deserted him, and once having given his adherence to the Bourbon regime at the restoration, he, like Napoleon, remained thereafter true to them.

He was one of the very few distinguished generals of the Napoleonic era who could boast of blue blood in his veins and who was a man of the most perfect breeding and unblemished honor. He died as grand chancellor of the Legion of Honor, at his Chateau of Courcelles-le-Roi, being succeeded by his son, the second duke, who was spared on the occasion of his christening by Charles X, and by the Duchess of Angoulême, that is to say, by the daughter of Louis XVI, and of Queen Marie Antoinette, and who had been imprisoned with them in the Temple.

Like most of the personages of the court of the Third Napoleon, he lived far beyond his means, although these were very large, and he had big estates; so that when he died in 1880 he left his son, the late duke, rather badly off. In fact, the late duke died in debt, heavily in debt at the time when he contracted, in 1899, a marriage with the elderly and very wealthy widow of M. Camasseas, who was for many years professor of police in Paris. She was a woman of over fifty, of extremely plebeian origin, the only child and sole heiress of old Dele-gorque, the founder of the General Omnibus Company in Paris, and also of the Parisian tramway capital.
Her two daughters of her first marriage served as bridesmaids on the occasion of her marriage to the duke.
Unfortunately for the latter, she was a woman of very thrifty disposition and exceedingly close-fisted. She forever the slumps in the value of her shares. For the extension of the tramway system, the underground railroads, and above all, the general adoption of the telephone, had the effect of reducing the value of her stock in the General Omnibus Company and in the Petites Voitures, concern by some 60 per cent.

Prior to the introduction of the telephone the Petites Voitures were often used for messages. When old De Villennant was editor-in-chief of the Paris Figaro, he always kept half a dozen of these petites voitures at the door of the Figaro offices day and night, so as to be always enabled to hasten reporters to the spot where anything was going on or to convey important messages. This developed in her an apprehension that she would die in the poorhouse, and accordingly she cut down all her household expenses to an almost incredible extent, her economy being of a character to excite not only the indignation of her husband, but the ridicule of the press. Moreover, she was constantly being sued by unpaid servants and for household bills.

At length the duke declined to stand it any longer, and inclosing some of the newspaper cuttings in which her parsimony and meanness were described, as savaging of dementia, he added: "My best compliments on the inclosure. I share the general opinion about you and am ready for the solution that I have already offered, namely, divorce. I prefer my debts—want of money is not a mortal malady—to the celebrity which you are acquiring, both as a woman and as a wife."

The divorce ensued, and it was followed a year later by the institution by the duke of further legal proceedings to prevent his ex-wife from continuing to style herself Duchesse de Tarente, which title and name she had been expressly forbidden to bear by the terms of the decree of divorce.
The duke might even have put up with the close-fistedness of his wife, had not she been constantly making him feel, both in private and in public, that she had purchased both his title and himself. That is why he insisted upon the dissolution of the marriage.
It is needless to add that there were no children born of the union and that the dukedom of Tarente is now extinct.

After his divorce the duke found himself still more harassed than before by his creditors, and unwilling to depend upon the bounty of friends or to request the charity of his former fellow members of the Jockey Club of the Cercle Agricole and of the Union, he just managed to exist in the most obscure and penury until, completely deserted, he died a pauper's death and received a pauper's funeral and grave, lucky, indeed, that his body was spared being turned over to the Paris hospitals for dissection and distribution among budding surgeons for purposes of study.

FORMER SERVANT GETS NEW TRIAL

Writ of Error Granted by Supreme Court in Case of Starke Against Storm Estate.

GOT NO PAY IN SEVEN YEARS

German Boy Also Wanted Damages for Master's Failure to Educate Him.

The story of a remarkable suit brought by a one-time German body-servant against the estate of his master for failure to pay for the services rendered and educational neglect, came to light yesterday when the Supreme Court of Appeals granted a writ of error to W. P. Starke, appellant, against P. H. Storm's executor, appellee. The petitioner seeks redress that he is aggrieved by the decision of the Circuit Court of Albemarle County, filed April 30, 1912, by which the court sustained the demurrer of Storm's executor and ordered the suit dismissed at the cost of Starke.

The case must now be taken up again, and Starke is given an opportunity to present to a jury his claims for $1,700 on an implied contract and $5,000 for neglect and refusal to educate him. The defense seeks immunity on the plea that no such relation as that of guardian and ward existed between Storm and the boy Starke, but only the relation of pure relation of master and servant.

Served Him for Seven Years.
Starke was born at Paveslowshe, Germany, on January 18, 1885. Shortly after the death of his father and mother, he was taken by Storm as a body servant, performing the usual duties of such a position. In July, 1900, Storm landed at New York, bringing the boy with him. About six months later, Storm moved into Virginia, and, purchasing an Albemarle farm, settled down to cultivate the land.

According to the declaration of Starke, he was given onerous employment as a farm hand; working in the fields, helping to stack, digging, shoveling and performing sundry other personal attentions on his master. Until 1905, when he quit Storm to work with a railroad, Starke declares that he received no remuneration for his exclusive services other than food, clothing, shelter and $120 advanced to him for various uses in seven years. In his bill, he estimates that Storm's estate owes him $1,700 for his seven years' or labor.

Starke's heaviest claim is made in connection with the failure of Storm to educate him. Although he performed the duties exacted of him in a cheerful manner and with unflinching regularity, Starke estimates that, although there was a public schoolhouse within 300 yards of Storm's farm, his master steadfastly refused to allow him the time or permission to attend this school and receive a common education. Starke claims that he was refused on the part of Storm to provide for his future damaged him to the extent of $5,000.

ONCE A DRUMMER; NOW A PREACHER

Rev. "Billy" Williams Arrives to Open Series of Meetings in This City.

Rev. "Billy" Williams, the preacher who was once a commercial traveler, will open at the Broad Street Methodist Church to-night a series of meetings in this city, which will extend over a period of three weeks. On the rolls of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the evangelist appears as Rev. W. H. Williams, of San Jose, Cal., for more than twenty-five years a regularly ordained minister of the gospel.

As "Billy" Williams, the evangelist, however, the preacher is known to many sections of the country, and particularly to the cities of North Carolina and Virginia. He arrived in town yesterday from Winston-Salem, N. C., where last Sunday night he closed a five-days' series of meetings, conducted by the Young Men's Christian Association of that city.

Mr. Williams was dubbed "drummer evangelist" by the old Jackson Whig, at Jackson, Tenn., twenty years ago.
The name was stuck to him ever since.
Before he entered the ministry, he spent many years in commercial activities on the road and gained a first-hand knowledge of the life and needs of the people of the sample cases. He is particularly successful as an evangelistic speaker to men.

The evangelist's subject at the Broad Street Methodist Church to-night is "The Revival of the Soul." He will speak at 7:45 o'clock, and the general public is invited to attend. It will be his first appearance in this city in fifteen years.

DENY REHEARING IN KANAWHA CASE

South Carolina Stockholders Lose Fight Against Holders of Receivers' Certificates.

The United States Circuit Court of Appeals yesterday denied a petition for a rehearing filed Monday by attorneys for the South Carolina stockholders of the Kanawha Lumber Corporation, who by a decision of the same court on February 20 lost their suit against the Bank of Nansmond, of Suffolk, and the Southern National Bank, of Wilmington, W. Va.

The denial of a rehearing yesterday, the litigation which involves the distribution of funds derived from the sale of assets of the lumber corporation, is brought to final conclusion. The last resource is exhausted, and under the opinion entered by the appellate court on February 20, the Suffolk bank will be paid $9,000, and the Wilmington bank $20,000, the face value of "receivers' certificates" held by them as security for loans made to the lumber company.

sent on to the Circuit Court of Appeals in this city, where the case was ac-

Society Women Wash Their Own Hair

"Home shampooing among society women is rapidly gaining in popularity," says Mae Martin, writing for the San Francisco Bee. "This is not fashion or fancy, but rather because splendid results are attained in this manner, through the use of canthox.
"If you would have luxuriant growth of glossy hair, try this easy method of shampooing: Dissolve a teaspoonful of canthox in a teacup of hot water, then pour on the scalp and rub vigorously for a few minutes, after which the hair and scalp should be rinsed carefully. When the hair is dry you will be delighted with its fluffy, glossy condition."
"While canthox is not expensive, you should be careful to get it in an original package."
